PITY STREET'S GREAT WONDER

COULD BE DOWN TO ISIDORE STEIN AND SUCH A BAD ONE.

FOR SUNDAY PLAYS

Frohman Would Alter the Law and Stage Serious Drama.

Charles Frohman said yesterday that he would try to have the State law modified so as to permit the Sunday presentation of plays that have "a sound moral lesson." He feels, according to his announcement, that the Church is not successfully coping with moral and ethical problems and that people are, however, perfectly willing to be preached at provided that they are not bored.

Mr. Frohman proposes that the plays be chosen by a committee of citizens in each community who have been chosen with humanitarian projects and who shall be appointed by the Governor and that the strictest censorship be exercised. "I have never believed in opening theaters on Sunday," said Mr. Frohman. "But recently I have been having conferences with several of the leading philanthropists in the city, and they impressed upon me the growing inability of the churches to reach precisely those people who have the most need of their influence. They have asked me whether it would not be wise to put on plays that would drive some good lesson and at the same time give and amuse the Sunday audience."

"I replied that the time was never more propitious for the experiment, as some of our best dramatists are now writing plays entirely for the purpose of teaching a lesson, but that unfortunately the time laws would not allow such an experiment. It is my object to offer a special Sunday drama, plays that expose the slums and injustice of contemporary social and political life. At present the stage is the most powerful influence for good or bad among all the American institutions. Why should not schools, churches, civic bodies and reform movements invite the powerful influences and interpretations of dramatic life? Surely the fundamental lessons of humanity and morality have to be taught to children and grownups alike naturally and impressively."

BURGLARS IN BARRYTOWN.

Two Enter Dr. Bessel's House and Escape With $200 and Two Watches.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Sept. 4.—Dr. James G. Bessel and his wife of Barrytown, Dutchess county, had a dramatic time with two burglars who entered their home early this morning. Mrs. Bessel, awakened by the noise of men in the house, called her husband, who was making his way in the direction of the noise, found one of the men in the bathroom. In the darkness the doctor demanded to know what the intruder was doing, but received no answer. He went after his revolver, which was in his room near by. When he returned to the bathroom he saw the man jump from the window and slide down the leader to the ground, escape in the darkness.

NEW HAVEN ROADS DEFENCE.

Tells Interstate Commission There's Still Nothing in Hauling Commuters.

NEW HAVEN, Sept. 4.—The New Haven road has filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission its defence of recent advance in commutation rates between points in Connecticut and in New York State. The company denied that the commutation had any bearing on the commutation rates in general or any authority to order a reduction in such rates. The company further replied as to the rates on the New Haven road, which made necessary by the increased cost of hauling passengers from Woodlawn Junction, which is the terminus of the railroad of the New Haven company. Grand Central Station in New York city. The company says:

LIVE TOPICS ABOUT TOWN.

The hour at which the first night performance of this young theatre season begins is better than any production. The other night a new drama scheduled to begin at a quarter after 8 did not raise its curtain until half an hour later.

No author wants his first act ruined by the noise of spectators tramping down the aisles. One of the house managers said the other day, "So it is impossible for the play to begin at the first advertised time. It is especially trying to the actors, who are nervous enough on a first night without this unnecessary delay. Every late arrival, however, is determined to be seen. Such scenes as this cannot be avoided. There are certain moments of the audience will have arrived and watch them come in. The result of this late arrival is that the theatre is full, but the audience is not. The theatre has begun from a quarter to half an hour after the time scheduled."

There is much about the noise of the audience that is not to be overlooked. It is a fact that the theatre is full, but the audience is not. The theatre has begun from a quarter to half an hour after the time scheduled."

It is not generally known that not a single gun has been discharged in a theatre since the first night of the season. The first night of the season was a success. The first night of the season was a success.

The Italian freight steamer Dinnamara, Capt. Carrano, which sailed in ballast from this port at 11 o'clock on Saturday morning for Genoa, returned to the port of Atlantic avenue, Brooklyn, yesterday having been in collision with a barge at 3:55 o'clock yesterday morning while about thirty-five miles out. Her bow was stove in below the water line. The barge which she hit was sunk and two men are supposed to have been drowned.

When the Dinnamara got to Sandy Hook on her way out her skipper found there a fog and he looked at the Hook at 9:30 o'clock. The fog was so thick that he began creeping along at about a six knot gait. The tug Concord with a tow of three barges loaded with pig iron, towed from Newport News to Fall River, came across the path of the Dinnamara. The Italian ship ran into the third barge, the Bristol, pretty near the stern. Within half a minute, Capt. Carrano says, the barge rolled over and sank.

There were three men on the Bristol. George Ricordi, first mate of the Dinnamara, went out in a boat with several of the crew and looked around for these men. They found one of them, Fred Johnson, hanging to a plank. Johnson had a gasp in his head and was in pretty bad shape. The boat from the Dinnamara kept up the search for some time but did not find the other two men. They were Capt. J. Brown and William Holmes.

The Dinnamara's captain found his own ship had been caught in a fog and turned back toward port. The gash had not extended back as far as the first bulkhead and the skipper was able to keep the water out and make port safely. Fred Johnson, the rescued man, was taken aboard by the tug Concord, which proceeded on her way with the two remaining barges. The ship and the tug were taken aboard by the tug Concord, which proceeded on her way with the two remaining barges.
